Brewer Basketball: Boys and Girls Defeat Aledo - Ready to Face Azle Hornets

The Brewer boy's basketball team improved to 19-5 on the season with a 50-31 victory over Aledo on Friday night and sit at 2-1 in district competition heading into tomorrow night's game against Azle.

Coach Jason Porostovsky said, overall, the victory over the Bearcats was a good effort from his team.

"We came out with a lot of energy, which was a pleasant sign to see," Porostovsky said. "We got off to a slow start on offense, but our defensive intensity allowed us to have a slight lead after one. We picked it up offensively in the second with Julian Perez hitting some big shots. To start the third, once again we hit a dry patch, but picked it up to end the third and opening the game up in the fourth quarter."

Perez led the Bears in scoring with 21 points, while Warren King and Tyren Mitchell added 7 points each, and Tre King and Rayanne Lomboto pitched in 6 points a piece.

Brewer had it's bye on Tuesday night, and Porostovsky said he had a couple of expectations.

"Our objectives for the bye are to regain our conditioning," Porostovsky said. "The Christmas break normally affects kids because of the mandatory five days off. But this year it's seems to have bothered us a bit more. Secondly, we want to finalize our wrinkles for the rest of the season."

The Bears will play Azle tomorrow night, and Porostovsky said the goals are the same as any other district game.

"Any district opponent we face, we have to be locked in and ready," Porostovsky said. "It's important (continued on page 2) to not take anyone lightly and understand our recipe for success each night.”

On the girl's side, the Lady Bears defeated Aledo by a score of 59-46 to improve to 21-4 on the season and 5-0 in district competition.

Coach Teranie Lewis said her team competed well in the contest.

“I was very proud of the way our team played against Aledo,” Lewis said. “I feel like we played a more complete game than we have been. More boxing out and rebounding on both ends. We played some really good defense and communicated well with each other. We didn’t do well on our free throws and missed more lay ups than I would like, but worked through that.”

Eryn McKinzie, Jayla Jackson-Allen and Chania Price were Brewer's top players this week.

Lewis said the Lady Bears had their bye this week, and Lewis said she had a couple of goals heading in.

“We will definitely get some recovery in and just a lot of fundamental things and probably add in some new stuff,” Lewis said.

The Lady Bears were ranked 10th among 5A girls programs as of the Jan. 4 poll by Max Preps.

First Woman on the Supreme Court - Sandra Day O'Connor

The Supreme Court of the United States is the highest court in the land and the last word on the authority and meaning of the Constitution short of an amendment. The court has handed down many decisions affecting American life and law. The justices who preside over the court sometimes become household names. Texas has produced a number of noted legal minds to serve on the court, including the nation's first woman justice, Sandra Day O'Connor.

Sandra Day was born in March 1930 in El Paso, the oldest of three children to ranchers Harry and Ada Day. The family also acquired a huge ranch in Arizona, so the future justice spent a lot of her childhood going back and forth between Arizona and Texas. Years later, she and her brother would compile some of their memorable childhood exploits in the book "Lazy B: Growing Up on a Cattle Ranch in the American Southwest."

At school, she excelled. Fellow students remembered her as extremely intelligent and very kind. She graduated from El Paso's Austin High School in 1946 at the age of 16. She quickly enrolled at Stanford University in California. She graduated with high honors in 1950, earning a degree in economics. Wanting to go further, she applied for and was accepted into Stanford Law School.

The law would change her life. At Stanford, she met and briefly dated future Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Rehnquist even went so far as to propose to her in 1951, but she declined. She soon began dating fellow student John Jay O'Connor of California while the two worked on the school's law journal. After she graduated in 1952, the two married.

In spite of graduating from one of the nation's most prestigious law schools, she found it difficult to find a job as an attorney because she was a woman. No private firm would hire her, and even state and local prosecutors were reluctant to hire her. Eventually, she talked her way into a position with the San Mateo County prosecuting attorney's office as a deputy county attorney. She would receive no salary and would not even have her own office. Nevertheless, she worked hard to show her skill. Eventually, she was given a modest salary and given more responsibilities.

Her husband was drafted into the army in 1954. O'Connor went to Germany with him and worked as a civilian attorney with the army's Quartermaster Corps until her husband's honorable discharge in 1956. The two then moved to the Phoenix area where her husband had received a position with a noted local law firm. They would soon have the first of their three sons. For the time being, she stayed home with their growing family.

While she was raising her young sons, she began getting active in Arizona politics. Arizona's Sen. Barry Goldwater was the Republican nominee for president in 1964, and O'Connor volunteered for his campaign. Though Goldwater lost, in 1965, Democratic Gov. Samuel Pearson Goddard appointed her as Arizona's assistant attorney general. In 1969, Gov. Jack Williams, a Republican, appointed her to an opening in the state senate. She worked well with the senators of both parties, gaining a reputation as a moderate and an able negotiator and legislator. In 1973, she was named Senate Majority Leader, becoming the first woman in the country to head any state legislative chamber.

In 1974, she returned to the law and was appointed as judge for the Maricopa County Superior Court, a prestigious position on the highest court in the state's largest county. In 1978, she was elected to the Arizona Court of Appeals.

In July 1981, Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart announced his retirement. President Ronald Reagan narrowed down a list of choices and decided to nominate O'Connor to fill the vacancy. She later reported she was surprised by the nomination and did not know she was a finalist for the position. By September, she was confirmed by the U. S. Senate to become the nation's first woman justice on the Supreme Court where she would serve for the next 24 years.

Part II

Sandra Day O'Connor had already made a mark on history by the time she was in her forties. In 1973, the Texas native became the first woman to head a state legislative chamber when she became Senate Majority Leader in the Arizona state senate. On August 19, 1981, the announcement (continued on page 5) of a woman nominee to the U. S. Supreme Court made headlines around the world in a time when rights for women were advancing across the globe. El Paso native Sandra Day O'Connor would make history again.

Conservatives who had supported Ronald Reagan's election as president were initially concerned about her record as a moderate in the Arizona legislature. O'Connor, however, calmly won over her critics. In spite of their initial misgivings, her nomination was nevertheless approved by the Senate unanimously on Sept. 21. She was sworn in four days later.

Judicial independence was a recurring theme in her career on the bench. O'Connor did not take an ideological approach. Instead, she looked at each case individually, which often made it difficult to predict how she would decide a question before the court. Throughout her long career, her decisions both thrilled and frustrated both liberals and conservatives. In the end, she earned the respect of Americans across the political spectrum.

She tended to side with conservatives on the bench, including her old friend from Stanford Law School, William Rehnquist, who himself would become chief justice by 1986. O'Connor remarked that she felt a great deal of pressure being the first woman on the court. In the early 1980s, there were still very few women serving as judges, and she knew it would be difficult to name another woman to the court if she faltered and recognized her position as a role model for women looking to careers in the law. She often said, "It's wonderful to be the first at something, but I don't want to be the last."

Though she was still the newest member of the court, she quickly took a leadership role in deciding the culture of the court. Getting people to work together was a skill she brought to the Arizona legislature, and she began a Supreme Court tradition of the justices having lunch together to promote a sense of teamwork.

Questions surrounding religion, firearms, civil rights, and abortion routinely came before the court. In 1983, she ruled with the majority in United States v. Place, declaring that it was not unconstitutional for drug-sniffing dogs to sniff luggage and property in a public place, but it was unconstitutional to hold such luggage until a police dog arrived.

In 1986, in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, four of the conservative justices were ready to overrule the controversial Roe v. Wade decision of 1973 that legalized abortion. O'Connor's vote in the Pennsylvania case was decisive in which she upheld the Roe decision but allowed limitations to be enacted. She was a skeptic in affirmative action cases before the court, but she often discussed the need for racial equality in education.

As her time on the court continued, she began becoming more of a swing vote on close decisions that divided the court. In 1993, she warmly welcomed Ruth Bader Ginsburg as the second woman on the Supreme Court, and the two developed a respected working relationship though they disagreed on many decisions. As early as 2000, O'Connor began expressing a desire to retire from the court. Her husband's health was uppermost in her mind as he slowly succumbed to Alzheimer's Disease.

In Bush v. Gore, she was part of the majority in the controversial decision that ordered the State of Florida to end recounts in the 2000 presidential election, a contest that came down to the results in that state. In the years afterward, she often wondered whether the court should have intervened at all. In 2003, she wrote the decision in Lockyer v. Andrade that upheld California's "three strikes law" mandating life sentences for individuals convicted of their third felony.

In 2005, she announced her retirement from the court and was succeeded by Justice Samuel Alito. She soon became the chancellor at the College of William and Mary in Virginia. She would still sit in on cases as a visiting judge on occasion. In 2009, President Barack Obama awarded her the Presidential Medal of Freedom in honor of her work on the Supreme Court. In 2009, John O'Connor, her husband of 57 years, died. In 2013, she wrote a book on some of the interesting episodes in the history of the Supreme Court called "Out of Order."

In her later years, her brilliant mind began to fade. Alzheimer's Disease struck and began to take its toll. She began to get more forgetful, and her physical health was declining. In 2018, she announced her retirement from public life, discussing her health issues. She spent her last few years in a nursing home in Phoenix, with her family and friends protecting her privacy and dignity.

The nation's ninety-first Supreme Court justice died quietly in December 2023 at age 93.

Emergency Blood Shortage May Delay Medical Procedures; Upcoming Donation Opportunities

The American Red Cross is experiencing an emergency blood shortage as the nation faces the lowest number of people giving blood in 20 years. The Red Cross blood supply has fallen to critically low levels across the country, and blood and platelet donors are urged to make a donation appointment to help alleviate the shortage and help ensure lifesaving medical procedures are not put on hold.

Over the last 20 years, the number of people donating blood to the Red Cross has fallen by about 40%. When fewer people donate blood, even small disruptions to blood donations – such as the nearly 7,000-unit shortfall in blood donations the Red Cross experienced between Christmas and New Year’s Day alone – can have a huge impact on the availability of blood products and dramatic consequences for those in need of emergency blood transfusion. Blood products are currently going to hospitals faster than blood donations are coming in, and in recent weeks, the Red Cross has had to limit distributions of type O blood products – among the most transfused blood types – to hospitals.

“Small changes in blood donor turnout can have a huge impact on the availability of blood products and dramatic consequences for those in need of an emergency blood transfusion,” said Dr. Eric Gehrie, executive physician director for the Red Cross. “More challenges may lie ahead as the potential for severe winter weather and seasonal illness may compound the dire blood supply situation. Donors of all types – especially those with type O blood and those giving platelets – are urged to give now.”

Don’t wait – to make an appointment, download the Red Cross Blood Donor App, visit RedCrossBlood.org or call 1-800-RED CROSS (1-800-733-2767).

The Red Cross and the National Football League (NFL) are partnering this January, during National Blood Donor Month, to urge individuals to give blood or platelets and help tackle the emergency blood shortage. Those who come to give blood, platelets or plasma in January will automatically be entered for a chance to win a trip for two to Super Bowl LVIII in Las Vegas. For details, visit RedCrossBlood.org/Super Bowl.

Who donations help

North Texas Red Crosser Alison Heidle, who works to find blood drive hosts and donors, knows firsthand how vital a readily available blood supply is. At 18 years old, two weeks from going to college, Heidle was involved in a car crash. Heidle's injuries required 25 units of blood and immediate surgery to save her life.

"Giving blood is such a compassionate human thing and a gift. You can't manufacture it or buy it in a store. You must rely on the goodness of other people. It binds us all together," Heidle said as she shared the importance of donating blood. After three months in the ICU, she left stronger.
